

---

Things to Remember for Your Last Minute Trip

Contributed by Webmaster
Saturday, 21 February 2009
Last Updated Saturday, 21 February 2009

By Corey Palmer

Spontaneity is something every person should try at least every once in awhile. Planning a last minute vacation should be a very good candidate for your spur of the moment activities. If you are tired of the city life, exhausted from work or simply just want to feel refreshed and recharged again, why not take an out of town trip? It need not be a well planned trip that you have been organizing over a couple of months or even weeks. Planning a last minute vacation could do so much for you and even give you that needed energy you have been searching for.

To ensure that your last minute trip would still be as great as those well planned vacations, keep in mind some of these things.

First of all, if you plan to go to tourist destinations like New York make sure that you are ready to stay in hotels that can be a bit costly. These places, since they are very popular with the tourists, are usually booked. Finding a cheap place might be hard unless you know someone from the city who can help you scout for a bargain.

On the other hand, if you are open to the idea of visiting a place not so known to tourists, you might get cheap deals. Flights and hotels in a place where there are not much tourists may offer discounts at the last minute just to fill in seats or rooms. Don't worry, there are many places that tourist do not go to but are very interesting and could provide you that needed break.

If you are planning a last minute vacation, you might also want to check with your local travel agent for promos and travel packages. You might be able to find cheap deals from them. They could also help you book your flight and hotel. In addition, you might want to inquire about the places you should visit.

Renting a car while you're in your vacation destination might also help. If you are planning to spend a week in a new city, a car with or without a driver, could make your stay more enjoyable. On the contrary, if you are just staying in a beach house or in one area, you can do away with a car.

Since you're planning your vacation last minute, you might want to consider what you want to do during the trip. Write a simple itinerary, which places you want to visit, the restaurants you want to try, etc. Do not, however, feel confined to your list. You may do things not planned, after all the trip itself is last minute.

Also, be open to the possibility that things might not be as smooth as you want them to be, especially if you are traveling with a couple of other people. Do not let little mishaps turn your vacation into a stressful trip. Just remember you are on this trip to take a break and have fun. These two things are the definite must that you can't skip.

Corey Palmer is a travel agent who specializes in overseas vacation travel. He offers some excellent last minute travel tips.

Luxury Travel

{mos_sb_discuss:2}